Helps Your Child Grow

Emergent Literacy

Acting out the pictures and connecting them with everyday experiences helps your baby begin to understand the actions and story represented on the page.

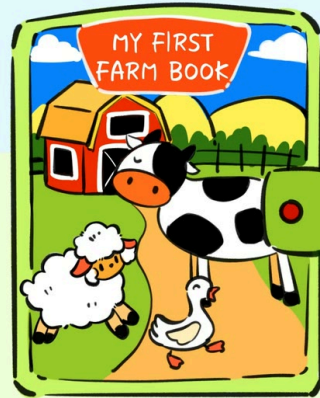

Fine Motor

Turning pages and pulling off and replacing hook-and-loop pieces gives your baby varied practice using their hands and fingers.

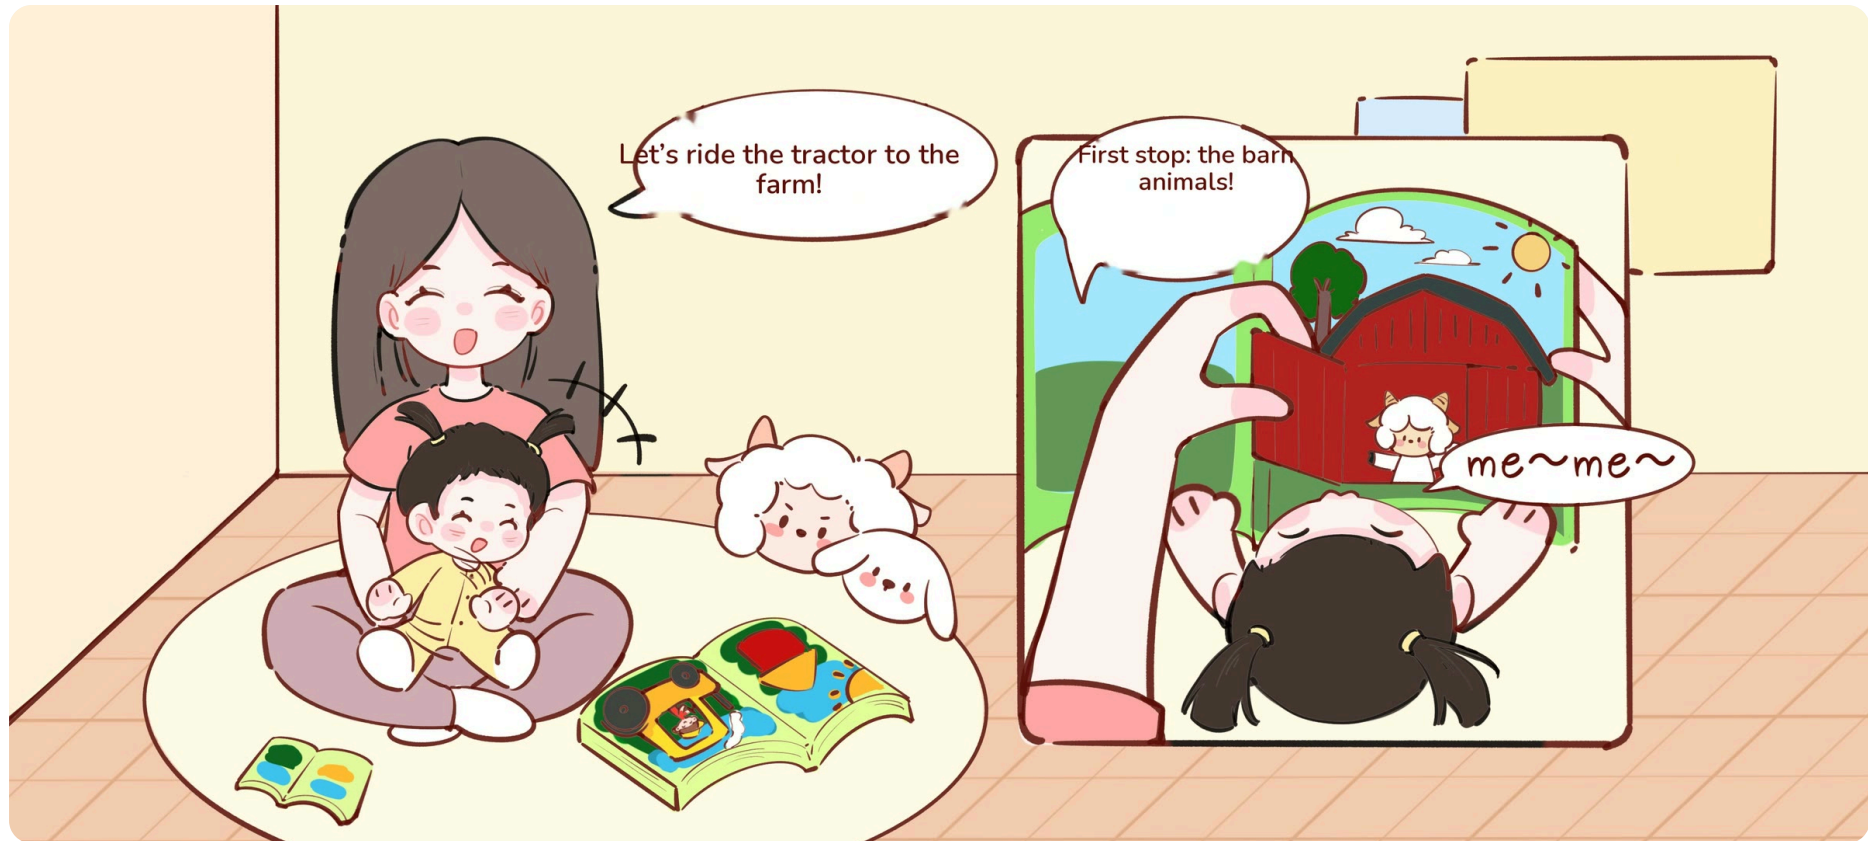

What You'll Need

Farm Activity Book

What You'll Need

1. A farm-themed lift-the-flap book or similar hook-and-loop activity book

Off We Go in the Tractor!

Open the farm lift-the-flap book and bring the pictures into the interaction. At a tractor, move your baby's hands as if you are driving together. When the page becomes an action they can join, they may be more eager to keep looking and turning.

Observations

- Points to the lamb in the book and imitates its "baa" while looking with you
- Laughs while you guide their hand in pretend driving

Tips

- Use an animated voice and big gestures to draw your baby into the story. Add a tractor noise or copy the sounds of the farm animals.
- Babies at this age cannot read independently. Your voice, movements, and expressions help your baby understand what the pictures and actions mean.

What's Hiding Under the Flap?

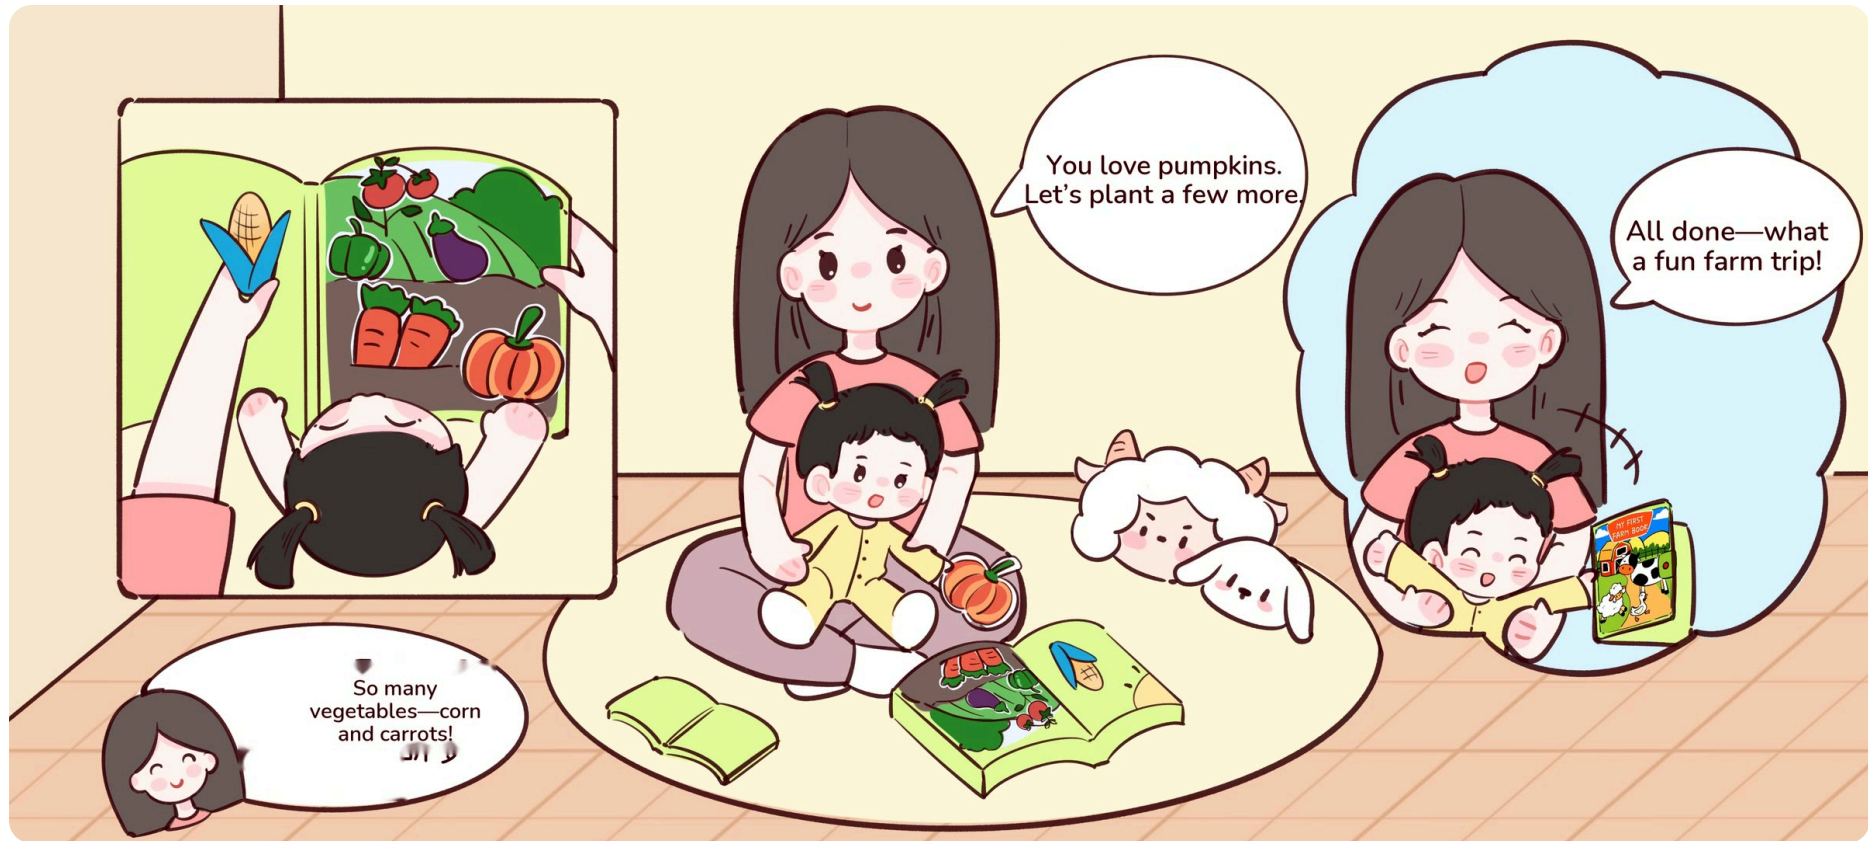

The book has lots of interactive features to discover. If your baby misses one, point to a flap or movable piece - such as the hen's wing - and give them time to explore it. Once your baby begins to interact with it, build the story around what they found and talk about the picture together.

Observations

- Finds an interactive feature in the book after you point it out
- Pinches the hen's wing flap and lifts it

Tips

- You do not need to show your baby how each interactive feature works right away. Give them time to lift, pull, and look on their own.
- If your baby wants to explore the same flap or movable piece again and again, stay on that page and follow their interest.

Vegetable Friends on the Farm

When a page shows something your baby knows, connect it with everyday life. On the farm page, invite your baby to “pick” a vegetable, then talk about which vegetables your family has eaten and which ones they like.

Observations

- Reaches for the pumpkin piece after hearing you say “pumpkin”
- Places the vegetable sticker on the hook-and-loop patch

Tips

- Connecting the book with familiar foods and experiences helps your baby understand and remember what they see on the page.
- Whatever your baby picks, follow their choice: “That’s a pumpkin. You like pumpkin.” “We saw corn like this at the store!”
